Additional Requirements:

Grade 5 in English Language, Lit or Humanities.

About the Course

For most students, Media Studies will be a new subject. This course is designed to enable students to analyse, create and evaluate the many ways we communicate today. We will explore many critical debates of contemporary media representation, audience reception and industry practice as well as making our own media products. Our main focus at Springwood is on the film industry and we have considerable success in creating print products.

Ultimately this dynamic course examines the many ways in which society and individuals are being manipulated by the media, and explores in turn, how to manipulate. It is both a theoretical and practical course with considerable hands on experience of modern media equipment including the latest MAC computers, video equipment and industry standard software.

Therefore, there are many opportunities for real world, student-centered, creativity. However, to succeed in this challenging subject, each student will have to be able express their thoughts with clarity and insight and this requires high levels of English ability (grade 5 and above).

Your Course:

We will follow the Eduqas Media Studies Syllabus:<http://www.eduqas.co.uk/qualifications/media-studies/as-a-level/>

Assessment

You will be assessed according to the Eduqas Media Studies specification and will be formatively assessed throughout the years in both year 12 and year 13. Your coursework is worth 30% and your exam work is worth 70%. You will sit two final exams in 2019.

Exam 1

Section A will test your ability to analyse Media Language, Representation,—through advertising, marketing, music video, or newspapers.

Section B will test your ability to analyse Media Industries and Audiences—through advertising, marketing, film, newspapers, radio, video games, and media contexts.

Exam 2

This examination will analyse "Television in a Global Age", "Magazines and Alternative Media" and "Media in an Online age".

Cross Media Production (Coursework)

Individuals will create a cross-media production in response to set briefs applying their knowledge and understanding of media language, representation, industry, audience and digital convergence.
